SUMMARY:

If you’ve ever hit 200 balls off of a flat striking surface at a driving range trying to improve your swing, or played 72 holes on a 60 thousand dollar simulator, you know there’s something missing. On a golf course, once you leave the tee box, no two shots are ever the same. Your feet may be three inches above the ball or two inches below while standing on an incline. Until now that couldn’t be duplicated. The Proformance golf striking surface is going to revolutionize the game!

Originally, I considered, and still know, there’s an opportunity to keep this product for myself and franchise. However, the initial start-up of manufacturing, etc., is a daunting task. As I progress, I’m more than confident I can get the financial backing to begin manufacture and retail sales.

The market for this product is certainly any retail establishment that has simulators, driving ranges, and golf schools; the cost of the product will be quickly offset in increased fees and popularity. Pro golfers spend massive dollars on every tool available, and this will certainly allow them to maximize their practice. Also, most individuals who spend 60,000 dollars to purchase a simulator will as well.

About the Developer

Mike Harve, from Indiana, have a property near a state park and reservoir. It's surrounded by campgrounds, filled with a whole lot of golf enthusiasts. Its also 25 minutes away from French Lick Indiana that has a casino and PGA level golf courses. Many of the visitors he meet in town consist of husbands who wants to play golf, and wives who wants to play slots at the casino. In winter the golf courses are mostly inaccessible. He looked into Top golf, but not only is it a lot of money, it's all about location, and we're a bit too far off the interstate to really justify it. His goal with the property is to open facility utilizing golf simulators. Mike contacted the Mars Rising Network and had a provisional and design patent application filed and had the invention designed properly so that he may see success with this great idea and turn it into a real product. He is actively seeking a company that would have an interest in licensing the product for royalty. Working with Mars Rising Network, this essential new design concept was refined and prepared to be presented as a commercial product.
